The Seventh International Conference on Advances in Information Mining and Management
http://www.iaria.org/conferences2017/IMMM17.html

Environmental sustainability has become a topic of particular interest and concern in the last 20 years. Environmental sustainability is focused upon responsible decision-making and action-taking for the protection of the environment, and thus, its ability to continue to support life. At the same time, environmental sustainability tackles the issue of developing optimal practices that will reduce, and eventually minimize, the negative impact on the environment. Further to pollution, waste, and energy reduction, environmental sustainability aims at developing processes that will lead to human societies becoming completely sustainable in the future. The use of non-parametric, noise-resistant, and learn-by-example approaches are pertinent to this end, and constitute the focus of this special track.

Topics include, but not limited to:

- Environmental sustainability
- Sustainable development
- Decision making
- Action taking
- Optimization
- Long-, medium- and long-term impact assessment
- Human activity and the environment
- Product life-cycle
