COCORA 2018, The Eighth International Conference on Advances in Cognitive Radio
April 22, 2018 to April 26, 2018 - Athens, Greece
<http://www.iaria.org/conferences2018/COCORA18.html>

The fifth generation (5G) of wireless networks is expected to support a multiplicity of applications that go far beyond ultra-broadband. The most demanding use cases involve massive machine type communication (mMTC), which refers to the connectivity of large numbers of low-cost and low-energy devices and ultra-reliable low-latency communication (URLLC), which denotes communication with stringent requirements in terms of latency, reliability and availability.

To meet these challenging requirements, three main dimensions need to be further developed, namely (1) Exploitation of new spectrum bands (e.g., mm-wave), (2) Ultra-densification and interworking of existing technologies in heterogeneous networks (HetNets) and (3) Optimization of spectrum usage through innovative spectrum sharing models and enhanced radio environmental maps (REMs). To leverage all these dimensions, innovative architectures with higher degree of flexibility, e.g., control/data separation, virtualization and network slicing, are strongly recommended.

Prospective authors are invited to submit original papers on topics including, but not limited to:

- Ultra-broadband
- Massive machine type communication (mMTC)
- Ultra-reliable low-latency communication (URLLC)
- Advanced radio resource management
- Mm-wave access and backhauling
- Ultra-densification and heterogeneous networks (HetNets)
- Carrier/spectrum aggregation (e.g., licensed assisted access (LAA))
- WLAN/Cellular integration (e.g., LWA and LWIP)
- Enhanced spectrum sharing models
- Advanced radio environmental maps (REMs)
- Innovative architectures for next-generation networks
- Wireless network virtualization

- Control/Data plane separation
- Network slicing
