October 18 - 22, 2020 - Porto, Portugal

The boost in social media platforms such as YouTube, Twitter, Instagram, Facebook, and more recently Patreon has fostered the opportunities to create and sustain a critical mass of consumers. This critical mass helps digital entrepreneurs to make a living from the web and move the economy by the generation of content. This special track intends to gather research that help to answer how is it possible to create a critical mass of consumers for building a personal brand, a small or medium enterprise, or even create a completely new industry.

The main objective of the track is to explore techniques, methods, strategies, business models and/or technical features associated to the concepts of digital entrepreneurship and the critical mass. The theoretical implications are associated with the theory of critical mass, theories of collectives or theories of entrepreneurship. The practical implications include the understanding of how to invite new comers to contribute in a community and make a living of it. All research methods and philosophies are welcome.

Topics include, but not limited to:

- Creation of a critical mass of users/consumers
- Sustainability of a critical mass of users/consumers
- Digital tools to support entrepreneurship
- Collective intelligence and entrepreneurship
- Crowdsourcing and entrepreneurship
- Crowdfunding and entrepreneurship

- Business model improvement through social media
- Incentives for digital contributors
- Incentives for digital users/consumers
