VALID 2018, The Tenth International Conference on Advances in System Testing and Validation Lifecycle

October 14, 2018 to October 18, 2018 - Nice, France

<http://www.iaria.org/conferences2018/VALID18.html>

Fault tolerance was once quartered in critical systems and high-risk sectors. Nowadays, more and more cross-organizational, economic, and societal infrastructures, formerly controlled by people, are driven by multi-cloud distributed applications without human intermediation. The dependability and fault tolerance of these modern applications are not options anymore. Cloud infrastructures bring virtualization, job scheduling, and programmable usage of computing, storage, and network resources on abundant but unreliable hardware. Dependability and runtime healing (fault tolerance) are necessarily software-implemented. How can engineers without any special skills in critical systems develop - design, program, test, and verify - and operate - configure, setup, deploy, and supervise - dependable and adaptable multi-cloud distributed applications?

This special track is devoted to

- Methods, techniques, and tools for robustness and fault tolerance test and verification (at Dev time)
- Runtime failure and fault detection, prediction, recovery, and repair (at Ops time), of dependable and adaptable distributed applications deployed on multiple cloud infrastructure stacks.
