eLmL 2022 - The Fourteenth International Conference on Mobile, Hybrid, and On-line Learning

June 26, 2022 to June 30, 2022 - Porto, Portugal

While the global pandemic intensified the research focus on online, hybrid, and mobile learning for students, attention must also be paid to how teachers are prepared for teaching and learning in these modes, as well as successful approaches to implementing online educational tools and practices. Whether in primary/secondary education, higher education, or informal learning environments, teachers have incredible influence over student learning. How teachers choose to implement online learning environments and online tools can greatly impact student outcomes. More research on teacher implementation practices is needed to learn how educators can maximize student learning in various learning contexts.

Additionally, how teachers are trained and prepared through professional development influences their implementation practices, confidence, and abilities. Teacher education programs can shift how new teachers work in online, hybrid, and mobile environments and use those tools for tomorrow's students. Professional development strives to continue teacher education on those topics to support teachers in an ever-evolving educational landscape. Research on effective training and professional development for various teaching applications will continue to spread ideas and practices that will support and prepare teachers, in turn supporting the students they teach.

This special track seeks to engage diverse researchers and practitioners on this topic of teacher implementation and teacher preparedness for online, hybrid, and mobile teaching and learning. To encourage a diverse track, there are a range of submission options available.

Topics include, but not limited to :

- Effective strategies for teaching in online, hybrid, and mobile environments
- Implementation practices for online learning resources and tools
- Teacher training or professional development for using online learning resources and tools
- Teacher training or professional development for teaching in online, hybrid, or mobile environments
- Designing effective teacher training or professional development
- Empirical research studies
- Case studies or qualitative research
- Theoretical approaches for teacher training/professional development or application of theory
