

Prof. Thabet Kacem

Thabet Kacem is a tenured associate professor of computer science at the University of the District of Columbia. He obtained his PhD in information technology at George Mason University in May 2016. He obtained his master's in computer science at the University of the District of Columbia in January 2010.

His research interests include cyber security, intelligent transportation systems, smart cities, cyber physical systems, blockchains and climate change.

He is the principal inventor of the US Patent number 11022696 entitled "ADS-BSec: A holistic framework to secure ADS-B". He has served as principal and co-principal investigator in several sponsored projects from governmental agencies such as NSF and NSA.